STOCK CLASSIFICATION BUCKETS

(as a % of net assets)

■ Strategic ■ Tactical
■ Option ■ Defensive

Strategic:

These are typically 'buy & hold' compounding stocks, generally characterized by good quality business and competent managements with a long track record.

Tactical:

These are not 'buy & hold' stocks. For these stocks, exiting at the right time is as important as getting in at the right time. They are generally from more cyclical industries and need to be part of the portfolio only during the upcycle.

Option:

These stocks appear very promising from a top-down perspective. However, they generally do not have long-term business or management track record. They are inherently riskier in nature but can have the potential to offer higher returns.

Defensive:

These stocks are generally big benchmark stocks where investment manager has low conviction about their outperformance. However, not owning them at all may be deemed too risky from a relative performance standpoint. These are generally neutral or underweight relative positions.
